'Tighter CIA Control Asked In Reuss Bill

Sentinel Washington Bureau

Washington, D. C. — A bill requiring tighter congressional and presidential control over operations of the central intelligence agency (CIA) was introduced Monday by Rep. Reuss (D-Wis.).

Reuss' bill would call on President Johnson to personally review within 60 days all of the CIA's special operations. It would also forbid the CIA to initiate special, nonintelligence operations without authorization in writing from the president.

Reuss' bill would set up a joint senate-house congressional watchdog committee to oversee CIA operations. The committee's membership would be rotated every four years.

The Reuss bill is one of several that have been introduced in recent weeks as a result of the controversy over CIA subsidies to the National Student association and other student and labor groups.
